LINKING TO SU

The word "portal" brings to mind images of a ship's window looking out onto exotic worlds. Through a portal, we view and experience new things.

In my last column I shared with you news about a portal to the Internet available to SU alumni and friends. From your desktop portal at our recently launched web site, zOrange.com, you can access the latest news about the University, link to the most popular SU sites, and surf the Internet with ease.

At zOrange.com you can create a desktop environment that blends your interest in SU with such other interests as the local weather, your stock portfolio, and news. Our portal offers you a gateway to some of the best e-commerce sites.

We have formed a partnership with zUniversity.com and 90 other educational institutions, bringing together a constituency of more than 19 million alumni, students, and faculty. When you access the Internet through zOrange.com, the Alumni Relations Endowment Fund benefits from your online browsing and shopping.

The Office of Alumni Relations is pleased to be part of the communications revolution by offering the SU portal to our alumni and friends. I urge you to visit our web site atZOrange.com. If you have any questions, contact us at sualumni@syr.edu or call 1-800-782-5867.

STROKE, STROKE...

The Syracuse Area Rowing Association (SARA) aids, supports, and promotes the sport of rowing at Syracuse University. "We encourage alumni to stay involved with the program, to contribute by buying shells and oars for the team, and to help fund scholarships," says John Nicholson '68, the group's president and a visiting professor of broadcast journalism at the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications. "We work closely with the University's athletics department to make sure that what we do is allowed under NCAA guidelines."

When founded in 1955 by Bruce Chamberlain '41, SARA focused mainly on promoting rowing in Central New York. In recent years it has expanded its membership to include alumni from across the country. "About three years ago, we decided to make a concerted effort to get alumni from outside Central New York more involved," Nicholson says. "Rick Holland '83, who lives in Boston and served two terms as president, did a lot to get alumni from different parts of the country to come to gatherings, meet each other, and support the team."

According to Barry Weiss '83, secretary of SARA and a former coxswain and crew manager, the association currently offers three scholarships, and plans to increase that number. In cooperation with the rowing association, SU's athletics department recently launched a fund-raising effort, Campaign for Crew, with a goal of $2 million. As of January 1, more than $850,000 had been raised.

HOMECOMING WEEKEND 2000

Last fall's Homecoming Weekend brought together hundreds of alumni from all over the country to enjoy a range of educational and recreational activities. Guided campus tours, lectures, exhibitions, tailgate parties, and brunches were all part of the weekend festivities. Sports enthusiasts were treated to a men's club hockey game at the new Ten- nity Ice Skating Pavilion and the SU-Miami football game at the Carrier Dome. In addition, a distinguished teacher and five alumni were honored for their contributions to Syracuse University.

Named Outstanding Teacher of the Year was Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs professor Richard G. Braungart. Honored as Outstanding Alumni were natural resources and energy consultant Richard M. Klingaman '57, G'60 (SUNY College of Environmental Science and Forestry); and School of Information Studies professor Elizabeth D. Liddy G'77, G'88.

Named Outstanding Young Alumni were John M. Mandych '89, G'92 of West Hartford, Connecticut; Mitchell C. Messenger '92, G'93 of Calabasas, California; and Eva Toth G'99 of New York City.

BEAUTIFUL SEINE-RY

The true grandeur of the Palace of Versailles in Paris comes alive as you marvel at the extravagance of its gilded ballrooms, imagine magnificently bejeweled courtiers filling its immense halls, and stroll along the paths of its luxurious gardens. This famous home of kings was one of the many exciting stops along the Seine River made by SU alumni and friends on a 12-day river cruise sponsored by the Syracuse University Alumni Association.

Last fall, some 100 alumni from SU, Brown, and Dartmouth shared accommodations aboard the river cruiser M/S Normandie. The scenic journey through the heart of France began in Paris, with two days devoted to discovering the wonders of the romantic "City of Light." While traveling the Seine at night, participants were dazzled by a spectacular display of thousands of lights flashing on the Eiffel Tower. They also heard informative lectures on French art, poetry, and culture.

Paris, known as the "City of Light," was one of the many interesting stops along the Seine River cruise sponsored by the Syracuse University Alumni Association.

From Paris, the ship glided up river through the French countryside, stopping at Giverny, where travelers wandered through Claude Monet's lush gardens and bright pink and green home; Rouen, with its ancient avenues laced with half-timbered houses and flamboyant Gothic architecture; enchanting Caudebec; and the port village of Honfleur. An excursion to the beaches of Normandy took in the stirring memorial at the battle site of Omaha Beach. "The trip gave my husband an opportunity to return to Omaha Beach for the first time since D-Day," says Helene Zukof of Louisville, Kentucky, who traveled with husband Walter Zukof '50. "It was a wonderful experience—the river and the company were just great."

After a brisk train ride aboard the Eurostar to London, alumni were ensconced in the elegant Churchill Intercontinental on Portman Square, with easy access to all points of this sophisticated city. Tours of the city, Windsor Palace, and Churchill's Cabinet War Rooms capped the journey, with plenty of free time to wander leisurely through London's picturesque streets, investigating unique shops as well as the fabled Harrods department store.

"This was a terrific trip," says Ann Ginsberg Klein '58 of Syracuse, who went on the Seine cruise with husband Irwin '55. "We got a wonderful overview of two great cities, and traveling slowly on the river was the best way to appreciate the beautiful countryside. In fact, I know the University is offering almost the exact same trip next fall. I'm tempted to go again!"

ARENTS PIONEER MEDAL AWARDED TO FAGENSON

Robert B. Fagenson '70 has been awarded the George Arents Pioneer Medal in recognition of his success in business and his commitment and loyalty to Syracuse University. After earning a bachelor's degree in transportation and finance from SU's School of Management, he joined Fagenson & Co., an investment services firm started by his father, and went on to become the company's president, a leader at the New York Stock Exchange, and an outstanding corporate citizen. He has remained involved with the University as a member of the Society of Fellows, the Metropolitan New York Advisory Board, the Schine Student Center Campaign National Committee, and the Management Alumni Association. The Arents award, SU's highest alumni honor, was presented to Fagenson in November at The Stock Exchange Luncheon Club in New York City.

ALUMNI CLUB PROGRAM OF THE YEAR

Last March the Syracuse University Alumni Club of Fort Myers, Florida, celebrated Orange Day on a high note by taking a group of 25 aspiring musicians from Suncoast elementary and middle schools to their first symphony concert. "We wanted to do something special for our annual Orange Day celebration, so we looked around for a local school with a music program that had students just starting to learn to play instruments," says Doug MacGregor '79, the club's publicity chairman. "We thought they'd like to hear a full-scale concert in person—that it might inspire them."

The youngsters were the club's special guests at a performance of the Gulf Coast Symphony, which featured songs from such movie scores as Superman, Titanic, Dances With Wolves, and Shine. The students also enjoyed a pre-concert reception, where they met several orchestra members; the symphony's musical director, Andrew Kurtz; and the concert's featured performer, 19-year-old Russian pianist Natalia Lavrova.

The club's then-president, R. Bruce MacGregor '54, music director of the Charlotte Chorale in Port Charlotte, Florida, was instrumental in planning the concert trip, which was chosen for the

CLASS OF 1950'S LIVING LEGACY

The Class of 1950 was one of the largest classes to graduate from Syracuse University. Many were World War II veterans who attended SU on the GI Bill. Their experiences of holding jobs, supporting families, and paying bills while studying for degrees as adult students were the motivation behind their decision to establish a $200,000 endowed scholarship fund to provide financial support for part-time students attending University College.

On its Golden Anniversary reunion last June, the class established the Class of 1950 Continuing Education Scholarship Fund to support eight three-credit courses at University College each year. "I consider this endowment fund an opportunity to support the visions and hopes of people needing the tools of education to forge their future and, by extension, the future of the country and the world," says class spokesperson Robert Sturge. "Every donation, no matter what the amount, will make a difference in helping deserving students."

In grateful acknowledgment to the Class of 1950 for establishing this living legacy, University College officials presented special service citations to mem-

A TRIBUTE TO ENEZ WHIPPLE '32

Summer at the Seashore: The Artist Colonies at East Hampton, Gloucester, and Provincetown opened the fall season of the Syracuse University Lubin House Gallery. The exhibition, which featured work from the Syracuse University Art Collection and Guild Hall, East Hampton's historic art museum, was dedicated to the memory of Enez Whipple '32, who was the driving force behind Guild Hall for 38 years.

doug Morey '65

When Doug Morey was an SU student, he never imagined that royalty and wildebeests would loom large in his future. Now they are an everyday part of his life as a bush pilot in East Africa. "Growing up in Syracuse, I'd never met someone from as far away as New York City," Morey says. "The social interactions I experienced at SU gave me the confidence I needed to feel comfortable with people from all over the world."

Inspired by his father's love of flying, Morey joined the U.S. Air Force following college. There was a glut of commercial pilots after he resigned from the service in 1969, so he accepted a six-month contract with East African Airways in Nairobi, Kenya, flying routes to Europe and Asia. Nearly 32 years later, he's still there, only now he flies smaller planes for AirKenya and lands on airstrips cut into the bush, far from the comforts of modern airports. "Every day is a bit of an adventure," Morey says. "The runways are often made of dirt and littered with wart hogs. There's no electricity or control towers. I regularly fly up to 50 passengers in one aircraft to safari camps throughout Kenya. Medical evacuations from remote locations are also common."

Morey has flown many well-known passengers, including former president Jimmy Carter and his wife, Rosalyn, Princess Caroline of Monaco, and fellow SU alumnus Dick Clark. "I also flew a series of trips for Prince Charles and his sons, William and Harry," Morey says. "They were quite jolly, and the sight and sound of them singing a chorus of 'We Three Kings' with tears of laughter streaming down their faces at a remote airstrip in the Serengeti on Easter Sunday is an image that will stay with me forever."

After 20 years of long flights and living out of a suitcase, Morey now shares a more settled life in Nairobi with his wife, Karen, and two young daughters, Nekesa (a tribal word meaning "born in the harvest") and Portia. "My wife and daughters often fly with me and love it as much as I do," Morey says. "It's a great life."

Jonathan Levit '93

Jonathan Levit often promised friends he'd someday appear in a sitcom. Instead, he settled for the next best thing—making his first big splash on TV guest-starring as con-artist/magician Billy Labonge on The X-Files' "Amazing Maleeni" episode last year. "I was the main character in the show," says Levit, a resident of Sherman Oaks, California.

When Levit graduated from the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications in 1993 with a bachelor's degree in advertising, he wasn't exactly on his way to becoming an actor. Though he had been a magician and street performer since age 12, growing up in St. Louis, he chose the college route because he wanted a career. Still, he dabbled in acting, and alumni may remember three annual Parents Weekend variety shows that Levit produced, emceed, and performed in.

Levit developed extensive computer experience working in the Newhouse School's computer labs and subsequently took a job in Denver with Quark Inc., a company that designs desktop publishing programs.

But having joined the business world, Levit still kept thinking about that sitcom. Finally, in 1997, he decided to sell most of his possessions, hop in a car, and move to Los Angeles to pursue his acting dream. "I started to realize I could say it and say it, but living in Denver wasn't going to get me on a sitcom," he says. "And I got the bug."

Upon moving to Los Angeles, Levit landed a job at a recruiting agency, joined the Magic Castle (a magicians' performing club), took acting classes, hired a manager, and began auditioning.

Along with his X-Files spot, he appeared on the series finale of last year's NBC show The Others, and in several short and feature-length independent films. In one feature, Final Payback, which was released in 2000, Levit played an ex-cop bodyguard. He also appeared as a Jewish doctor in Tortilla Heaven.

Of course, Levit's goal is still to star on a sitcom or television show. "What I would love to get tomorrow," he says, "is a regular job on a television show, where I would go to work each week and act."

Elm, '94, G'95

Vou could say Cecelia "Cissy" Elm is many things, but typical isn't one of them. In the 1970s, when she was "just a homemaker," she served the Onondaga County Probation Department as a detention boarding home parent, taking in delinquent children. When her own children were older, she worked as a liaison between school and home for the Syracuse City School District in the Indian Education Program.

Elm worked at several different jobs, mostly at minimum wage, until a supervisor at Kmart recognized her innate abilities and urged her to continue her education. So at 46, this Native American woman went first to Onondaga Community College and then to SU, graduating with a master's degree in social work.

Today Elm splits her time between Syracuse and New York City as project director of the HIV/AIDS Project for the American Indian Community House (AICH). She had worked part time with the organization's substance-abuse program while she was in school. After completing her master's degree, she was hired full time as program coordinator for the outreach education coordinator network of the AICH HIV/AIDS Project. "We've made great strides," Elm says. "Previously there was very little information getting out to native communities about HIV/AIDS. Having native people from the same nation going out and providing education was important, but it took time to accomplish."

Initially, the native population didn't see HIV/AIDS as a problem because it was viewed as a gay white male disease, Elm says. "Now they understand it's a concern for everyone who is sexually active," she says. "All our material is geared toward native people, and each of our sites produces literature on HIV with graphics particular to that location."

Her project also targets young people in its Generations Program, in which an elder teaches Native American youths about HIV by tying it into their culture.

"All my life I've felt people needed someone to understand and help," she says. "Social work isn't cut and dried. I like empowering people, which is a cultural belief with Native Americans anyway." —Carol North Schmuckler

Ted Martin '61

Syracuse University Board of Trustees member Ted Martin travels all over the world, but Syracuse has always remained on his map. Growing up in Utica, New York, he was quite familiar with Syracuse University and, after starting his studies at Utica College, he came to SU and completed a bachelor's degree in economics.

Following graduation, Martin spent seven years in the U.S. Air Force, earning a captain's rank and serving as a pilot. After leaving the service, he began a steady ascent in the corporate world. He credits his SU education and the management skills he acquired in the Air Force with providing a strong foundation for his business career. "In the service, I learned everything about dealing with people," he says, "especially managing a group of people focused on a specific task."

Martin launched a corporate career as a financial analyst at Chevron. Since then, he has worked as a financial consultant for Arthur B. Little Company, advising some of its biggest clients, including Woolworth's and General Electric; served in Canada as president of automotive operations for Bendix, later known as Allied Signal, before returning to Allied Signal in the United States; and was an executive with the Barnes Group, an automotive and airline parts manufacturer based in Connecticut. As Martin's resumé grew, so did his travel log. "I was literally all over the world for much of my career," he says.

By the time he retired as president and CEO of the Barnes Group in 1998, he was ready to give up the executive lifestyle. "At that level, it really is a commitment," Martin says. "Twelve-hour days were typical—six days a week."

Martin and his wife, Grace, now live in Naples, Florida, but he hasn't relegated his luggage to the basement just yet. He is still on the boards of several Fortune 500 companies and the Naples Philharmonic. He also is a trustee at Utica College, where he was the 1999 commencement speaker and was awarded an honorary degree. Along with his SU trustee duties, he serves on the L.C. Smith College of Engineering and Computer Science Advisory Board, where he believes he can use his business experience to help the college address key issues. "Education continues to be important to me," Martin says. "The only way you get somewhere in this world is by studying and working hard. If I can do a little bit to help students who want to do that, then that's great."
